February 26th

My very dear Anne
I have not
dared to write to you, because it would be but an inducement
for you to return
me a word, which is forbidden to your eyes. — This note is the day that I am
forced to go to Andover

next week, to see after the woman there,
who is left in my charge - Apparently she can live but little longer and wish to see me. My one thought is, it
takes me through Boston - and I can see and talk with you, for which I am longing. May I appear at your door with Wednesday afternoon.

and find a welcome in your dear face. And if you should chance to have no just or other obstacle, may I stay until the next morning? But this is not essential - the night could easily be spent elsewhere - without much curtailing my talks with you. - So I must leave early in the morning to make my connection at Salem. Don't let this proposition cause a moment's inconvenience to see you is all I want, and had I heard are unnecessary for that. If Wednesday the 4th were too stormy - I might have to defer it until Thursday With dear love always Fidelia
